SOLO VOICE.

NOTE.—To realise the effect of this beautiful and original conception of Dr. Croch, some pains will be required. The Chorus should stand apart from the Solo-Singer, to give the effect of distance, as in a chorus behind the scenes at a theatre. The original accompaniment is for a Flute, two Oboes, two Horns in A, two Horns in D, two Bassoons, and Double-Bass, which should play near the Chorus. The absence of this accompaniment may be best compensated by an Organ. When the Chorus has obtained the swelling and diminishing sounds in their due gradations, the Solo-Singer will be enabled to give that exact degree of prominence to his part which is necessary to place the whole composition before the audience in its true light. Without these precautions, and very careful rehearsal, the composition may be greatly misunderstood, and fail of its effect.
